

Career Opportunities in International Consulting

This is one of those niche fields in which a Maxwell graduate, particularly with a dual degree in ECN/IR and MPA/IR, would have a relative advantage. Although many management positions actively recruit students with an MBA, positions equally favor candidates with advanced degrees in economics, law, mathematics, and engineering, among others. In a large and broad-based field such as consulting, there is a niche for a wide array of skill sets.

Introduction

Management consulting (also called strategy consulting) refers to the practice of helping companies improve performance through analysis of existing business problems and development of future plans. Management consulting usually involves the identification of best practices, analytical techniques, change management and coaching skills, technology implementation, strategy development or even simply providing the advantage of an outsider's perspective. Management consultants generally bring formal frameworks or methodologies to identify problems or suggest more effective or efficient ways of performing existing business tasks.

Management Consulting is becoming more prevalent in non-business related fields as well. As the need for professional and specialized advice grows, other industries such as government, quasi-government and not-for-profit agencies are turning to the same managerial principles that have helped the private sector for years. International NGO's, multilateral organizations, global financial services, and governments are now employing consultants at a rapid pace. A combination of skills such as an economics degree or a public administration degree with international relations is increasingly a desired skill set sought by employers in this field.

History

Management consulting grew with the rise of management as a unique field of study. The first management consulting firm was Arthur D. Little, founded in the late 1890s by the MIT professor of the same name. Though Arthur D. Little later became a general management consultancy, it originally specialized in technical research. Booz Allen Hamilton was founded by Edwin G. Booz, a graduate of the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University, in 1914 as a management consultancy and the first to serve both industry and government clients. The first pure management and strategy consulting company was McKinsey & Company, considered the current leader in the field. McKinsey was founded in Chicago during 1926 by James O. McKinsey, but the modern McKinsey was shaped by Marvin Bower, who believed that management consultancies should adhere to the same high professional standards as lawyers and doctors.

After World War II, a number of new management consulting firms formed, most notably Boston Consulting Group, founded in 1963, which brought a vigorous analytical approach to the study of management and strategy. Work done at Booz Allen, McKinsey, BCG, and Harvard Business School during the 1960s and 70s developed the tools and approaches that would define the new field of strategic management, setting the groundwork for many consulting firms to follow. Another major player of more recent fame is Bain & Company, whose innovative focus on shareholder wealth (including its successful private equity business) set it apart from its older brethren. Also significant was the development of consulting arms by both accounting firms (such as Arthur Andersen) and global IT services companies (such as IBM). Though not as focused on strategy or the executive agenda, these consulting businesses were well-funded and often arrived on client sites in force.

Current state of the industry

Management consulting has grown rapidly, with growth rates of the industry exceeding 20% in the 1980s and 1990s. As a business service, consulting remains highly cyclical and linked to overall economic conditions. The consulting industry shrank during the 2001-2003 period, but had been experiencing slowly increasing growth since. In 2004, revenues were up 3% over the previous year, yielding a market size of nearly $125 billion.

Currently, there are three main types of consulting firms. First, there are large, diversified organizations, such as IBM's Global Services that offer a range of services, including Information technology consulting, in addition to a management consulting practice. Second are the large management and strategic consulting specialists, that offer purely management consulting, but are not specialized in any specific industry, like the McKinsey & Company. Finally, there are boutique firms, usually small, that have focused areas of consulting expertise in specific industries or technologies. These are usually more technical in nature.

Internal Corporate Consulting

Added to these approaches are corporations that set up their own internal consulting groups, hiring internal management consultants either from within the corporation, or from external firms whose employees have tired of constant travelling. Corporations such as SunLife, IBM, Fidelity, Chevron Texaco, Metlife and Bristol Myer Squibb have found these groups to be particularly helpful. Many of these corporations have internal groups of as many as 25 to 30 full-time consultants.
